

Dear friend,

Life is all about making choices. It's the most powerful ability we have. And while we can't change the fact that we have Parkinson's, we can choose what we do about it. By starting this new medication, you're choosing to change the way you approach your treatment.

In 2015, I made the same choice. And for me, it's been a good one. This medication allows me to spend more of my day the way I want, despite my Parkinson's. Like most people, my doctor adjusted my dose until she found the one that was right for me. Which, as it turns out, is a very normal part of treatment with this medication. So don't get discouraged if your doctor adjusts your dose, too.

This and other helpful information - like how your new medication works, how to take it, and what to expect from treatment - can be found in the pages of the enclosed welcome kit. And if you have any other questions, just ask your healthcare provider.

You've got this.

Yours -
Debbie
